AN ADVANCED IDEA

It is to be hoped that Amelia Earhart's impression on D. A. R. delegates in Washington last week was deeper than that which ordinarily would be made by a heroine of aviation. Whether they appreciated it or not, the Daughters of the American Revolution were being invited to participate in an idea that was worth thinking about over the weekend.

Miss Earhart seemed a little timid about advancing it, because she was aware that it probably represented a radical viewpoint to most of her listeners. But she had been given a grand opportunity, and she earned credit by taking advantage of it. What the good ladies thought of her audacity isn't known, but some of them may have been enthusiastic.

The kernel of her thought was that no organization should advocate armaments unless the members were willing to bear arms themselves. In other words, the D. A. R., ardent advocate of more power in every department of national defense, should shed its traditional conceptions of chivalry, which keep women in a safe place behind the battle lines. If its members want deadlier guns, bigger battleships and a stronger army, they should be willing to participate in the use of them.

Miss Earhart apparently is sincere, but it is hard to imagine that her sincerity could register on a D. A. R. audience. Rather, her statement to members of that organization would bear the marks of a sly attempt to reduce its firm policy of an insuperable national defense to the absurd. But, even so, the point is not lost.

She represents a new type of American womanhood—a type which has earned the right to compete on an equal footing with men in a man's field. If there were to be war, she would insist, presumably, on her right as a patriot to use her flying ability in an active capacity. If there has to be slaughter, she would want to take part in it.

There are others who believe with her in this matter. They have taken the emancipation of their sex with unexpected seriousness. And what, pray tell, would happen to chivalry's traditions if the question were to be made an open issue? The D. A. R., which has been trying to think realistically about war, is well qualified to give judgment. Miss Earhart has done well to remind the organization of a new conception of woman's responsibility.

ANOTHER SALESMAN STORY

The census bureau has been utilizing the information it obtained three years ago to paint in the background of a familiar story—the effect of the depression on that favorite character, the salesman. The point to the story is familiar; details have been vague.

During the decade from 1920 to 1930, which was characterized by terrific selling pressure as more and more new products were placed on the market, occupations connected with sale and distribution of goods and services increased more than 40 per cent. Census takers in 1930 found 6,081,467 persons gainfully employed in such occupations; in 1920 they found only 4,257,684.

The expansion of commerce in this period had other effects, too. The number of persons engaged in giving professional service increased. More people were engaged in clerical work and domestic service. In the occupation of salesmanship alone, there was a 73 per cent increase. The nation was powerfully organized to get new products into buyers' hands.

But during the same period a strange thing was happening in manufacturing and mechanical industries. Occupations in these classifications did not keep pace; they increased only 9 per cent. In 1920 there were 12,931,879 persons engaged in production under these classifications, but in 1930 there were only 14,110,652. Technological improvements had enabled them to supply more than enough products with only 9 per cent more labor. Frantic efforts to keep ahead of them had ballooned employment in sales and distribution classifications.

The financial collapse which left a vast quantity of goods to be disposed of in a collapsing market, stimulated even further the sales effort. It was not until buying power had been exhausted and prices began to decline that sales forces were reduced to any great extent. The depression affected production employees more quickly, for obvious reasons.

To balance the picture, however, there is the belief that resumption of production would provide employment for people engaged in manufacturing long before it would increase employment among those engaged in selling and distributing. The services of sales forces are needed to create a demand for new and unfamiliar products. Unless they appear, the salesman's outlook will remain gloomy. He came into prosperity on high tide, and it will take another high tide to carry him out of the hole into which he fell when prosperity's waters receded.

What Others Say

LIFE ITS OWN MEMORIAL

That styles in tombstones inscriptions are subject to change and have changed in certain essential respects during the last half century are facts brought to public attention by a veteran Ohio stonemason, who has been carving epitaphs for five decades. The public, however, will not agree with him that the change is for the worse.

The sculptor for the dead laments that sentimental epitaphs are no longer inscribed on headstones. The modern custom of carving only names and dates on tombstones represents to him a loss of the "uncivilized" hinterland where mourning relatives cause to be chiseled upon the monuments of the dead brief testimonies to the character of the deceased, elegiac or scriptural verses, and even notes of warning to the living or an appraisal on the dead. Rural cemeteries furnish many grotesque examples of this custom of not so long ago.

And why should the tombstone furnish more facts about the dead than the name and dates of birth and death? Men's works are preserved elsewhere than on polished slabs of marble and as he lives he writes the record of that life upon a tablet that not even time can wholly efface.—Newark Advocate.

By O. O. McINTYRE.

NEW YORK, April 24.—Diary of a modern Peppy: Out and hallooed to Octavius Roy Cohen in such a grave study he did not look up. So breakfasting on a tasty ham Ben Finney sent and walking to Irving Cobb's where pleasant discourse with Thomas P. Watson and Matthew Carney, mighty captains of industry.

Home to slit my mail and notes from Aileen Stone, Fred's wife, Blyth Daly, Jack Dempsey and Michael Arlen. Then talking by phone to Watterson Rothbacher in Beverly and much argle-bargle. So a minute to see the gadding Frazier Hunt but in such a fustly humour did not tarry.

Breaking bread in the evening with Colette and George Armsby where came the Edward R. Tinkers, the Reginald Newtons and the Jack Johnstons. Home at midnight and the stars so pretty to see drove to the Hudson and idled along the docks watching a big liner berth.

Summer again brings out the toddling old men under sun umbrellas to the croquet grounds of Central Park. Many come in the mid-afternoon and remain until the frogs begin fluting sadly in the south lake. Now and then a juvenescent touch is provided by such croquetists as the younger Harpo Marx and the elfin Alexander Wolcott.

While watching venerable croquet players there came through a slit in the shrubbery an oldish fellow whose wallowing walk suggested a casual of the sea. He dropped on the bench at my side, slipped a cutty of tobacco in his cheek, watched the players awhile, then snorted: "Hell's bells!" and walked on. His attitude was thorough disgust. He seemed to think it sissy stuff.

And down a green meander of the park I passed a figure so strikingly the image of Mary Manning during her professional years I was startled. She is one of the most remembered actresses of juniper days. During her sway I sat in the old Coates House lobby in Kansas City, a gawk from the creek trying to not like a townie to watch her return after seeing her at the theater. Passing the cushioned chair in which I nuzzled, she exclaimed: "I've forgotten my key!" I made it to the clerk in an eyelash and handed it to her with flushed earnestness. "How gracious!" she murmured in that faraway voice. Such a contact, of course, was of no consequence whatever to her, but was one of life's juicy adventures to me. And I've been a fool for "gracious" since.

Personal nomination for the most inconspicuous of the chronic first nighters—Lee Shubert.

In all life's affections there is nothing so awesome as a monocyte. With all his charm, George Arliss would not be half so captivating minus the single eye-glass. De Seaguala, of the opera, among the first on Broadway to sport the monocle, was laughed at, but it was a passport to homes to which many other fingers were denied. I saw the tug of the monocle stressed at the Casino last evening. He sat alone in full dress splendor, with a glass screwed into his eye with the fixity of a chalet teetering on a Pyrenean cap. No one talked to dinner companions. They just stared at the monoclist who did not eat but, in the manner of Chekov's hero, "partook of food."

Telegram from "Affectionate Reader": "You better begin walking around the reservoir again. You're getting flabby. Also I don't see you around at first nights or swanky restaurants any more. And doesn't anyone ever ask you to a cocktail party these days?"

HEALTH

Pro: It By Knowledge Of Health
"Navy finds half of recruits physically unfit."

"Malnutrition up 55 per cent in schools in five years."

These are headlines I saw in one paper only a few days ago. They indicate conditions that are discouraging.

There are those who boast that the death rate and the sickness rate are unusually low. They are low and I am glad of it. But we would be foolish indeed to imagine that the future is bright as regards health conditions.

Just as sure as fate the undernourishment, the malnutrition of children will lead to tuberculosis and other ailments. The percentage of physically unfit in the next generation will be higher than the navy finds it today.

Foundation for Adult Health

The foundation of adult health is laid in infancy and childhood. The strong teeth and sturdy bones, the tissues resistant to disease, the determination of long life—all these depend on the favorable conditions of early life.

With every passing year we add to our knowledge of how to live. The research scientists are at work, day and night, to solve those things that have been mysterious heretofore. It is our business, as sensible men and women, to take advantage of the new knowledge. Every parent must master and apply it.

There is no secret about how to order our affairs to give us long life. The rules are simple.

Proper food, rightly eaten; an abundance of sleep; fresh air, day and night; exercise in the sunlight; plenty of water, outside and in; a contented mind. That is the whole program!

You do not need riches, a scientific mind or sagacity to be a well, strong, happy person. But you can't hope to have any of them if you neglect the simple rules of hygiene.

You know my old saying: You live on one-third of what you eat and the doctors live on the other two-thirds! Most of us eat entirely too much. In consequence, the stomach, intestines, liver and kidneys are asked to do far more than their normal capacity permits.

The elimination is delayed. Poisons are dammed up within the body and health is sure to suffer. Unless the food is well chosen it does not supply the iron required by the blood. It lacks the other minerals and the vitamins so intimately related to life and vigor.

The fact that the navy finds so many physically unfit is proof that we have not profited by what we learned in the examination of our military recruits at the beginning of the war. Let us begin now to correct our evil habits. By all means let us feed the children so that the percentage of malnutrition will constantly fall.

THE CHALLENGE OF LOVE

by WARWICK DEEPING

SYNOPSIS

Dr. John Wolfe, young and capable assistant of the inefficient old Dr. Montague Threadgold, is shocked at the pollution he finds everywhere in the little town of Navestock. The young doctor's greatest obstacle in trying to better conditions is the bitter resentment of the people themselves. The affable Threadgold appears more interested in humoring his patients and fattening his purse than he is in curing their ills. He cautions Wolfe against using necessary "expensive" medicines when the "ordinary" preparations will do. Wolfe would be tempted to give up if it were not for lovely young Jess MacCall, whose sincerity and courageous outlook are an incentive to keep fighting. Filled with curiosity as to how Wolfe spends his time, Mrs. Threadgold searches his room and finds a map he has prepared showing Navestock's polluted areas. She informs her husband of what she calls Wolfe's "gross disloyalty and underhand spying" and suggests that her husband either make him discontinue his researches or discharge him. Wolfe is summoned to a case of sunstroke in the "Pardons" fields, the estate of the wealthy Brandons.

CHAPTER NINETEEN

The sunburnt man led Wolfe along a path beside the river. The fields, shorn by the scythe, were a brownish yellow, and the scattered earth, ploughed up in lines, and patches by the mules, a pale, dry brown. Westwards, "Pardons" rose as a great mound of green shadows, its twisted chimneys showing above the solemn spires of its cedars. The garden, sloping towards the river, was splashed here and there with colour. "Pardons" was famous for its lawns, sleek sun-streaked stretches of grass spreading in long curves under the motionless canopies of its trees. The place satisfied the eyes with its calm, cool opulence. Between the dark trunks of the cedars Wolfe saw the fishponds glimmering, studded with the green leaves and the white-and-yellow cups of the water-lilies. Beyond the house spread the park, clasped by a redbrick wall that rose and fell with the undulations of the ground. Deer herded there amid the bracken, and about the clumps of beech trees that were like great temples paved with bronze. Some of the old oaks were mere huge, grey shells stretching out a few twisted limbs like monsters delaying time. Between the park and the garden ran yew hedges twenty feet high, black as midnight, and as solemn.

The field under the park wall was fragrant with tossed and sun-scorched hay. Only half of it had been mown, the fresh swatches lying at the purple edge of the uncut grass. Men had thrown down their scythes, women their rakes and forks. They had huddled themselves in a group under the boughs of an oak that grew close to the park wall, the pink-and-white sun-bonnets of the women mixed with the hats of the men. A crowd never seems to think it is a mere amorphous mass, an amoeba-like thing that flows, and quite jolly-like protrusions when stimulated by curiosity, sympathy, and fear.

Wolfe pushed through.

"Get back, please, get back."

The circle enlarged itself like a smoke ring, with irregular undulations. At the foot of the tree they had laid a man. His face was dead-white with a queer glistening whiteness.

The haymakers stared at Wolfe, but Wolfe looked only at the man. He bent down, and put a hand inside his shirt.

"When did it happen?"

The woman with the wet rag answered him through her blubberings.

"Not an hour past, doctor."

"After a meal, eh?"

"Yes, sir."

"And plenty of drink?"

She looked at him with humiliated eyes pleading pitifully in a wrinkled, ugly face.

"E be'n't dying, doctor?"

Wolfe was silent, feeling the beat of the man's heart.

"Oh, don't say it be death, sir. He was such a lusty chap. He was laughing over 'is beer."

"I'm sorry. But he's bad."

The woman began to sob, the strings of her sunbonnet twitching upon her shoulders.

Wolfe was raising the man's lids when a voice came from somewhere, a deep, languid, mellow voice, and if colour can be ascribed to voices, the colour of gold under trees at twilight. The country folk moved aside. The woman in the blue bodice sat up and wiped her eyes with the wet rag.

"Who is it?"

"Tom Bett, ma'am."

"A sunstroke?"

"Dr. Threadgold's man be here."

Wolfe, half turning, saw a woman in a white dress moving from the open sunlight into the shade of the oak. She seemed to glide rather than to walk in the cloud-like expanse of her crinoline. She was a very tall woman, and a mass of auburn hair surrounded a face that was white and smooth as ivory. This hair of hers was the colour of copper in certain lights; in others—all doused over with reddish gold and though her face was so smooth and white the red mouth streaked it with a colour that was almost the colour of blood. Her eyes, dark and large, were filled with an expression as of inexpressible ennui that drowned the light in them, and made them resemble the eyes of one who suffered.

Wolfe rose. He knew by instinct that this woman was the mistress of "Pardons," owner of a third of Navestock town, mother of that rough-riding youngster whom he had pulled up once in Bridge Street.

Mrs. Brandon moved across the grass under the shade of the oak. She was still young, not more than thirty, but her face lacked all animation, the proud, bored, dead face of a woman who no longer enjoyed anything. She looked at the unconscious man and the weeping woman as though she were staring at some picture crowded amid a thousand others into the gallery of life. She had grown tired of looking at pictures. Her eyes said as much.

"Is it a bad case?"

"I am afraid so."

"Give any orders that you wish. He can be taken up to any of my cottages."

"Thank you."

Wolfe called some of the men and told them to fetch a hurdle or a door and a sheet wrung out in cold water. Happening to turn again towards Mrs. Brandon, he found her eyes fixed on him with a vague and careless curiosity.

"Wolfe was struck by one of those flashes of surprise that strike across the clear calm of a strong man's consciousness. He felt suddenly and unaccountably embarrassed, like a raw youth in a drawing room. He looked at her and realized that she was a woman to whom he had nothing at all to say.

His abrupt uneasiness betrayed itself in a certain brusquerie.

"I may send to the house for anything I want?"

"Please do."

"I suppose there is not such a thing as ice to be had?"

"No. I suppose not."

She turned away to speak to the woman in the blue bodice and white apron, and Wolfe bent over the unconscious man. Yet he could not prevent himself from listening to the beautifully casual voice of the woman in white. She spoke as a statue might be expected to speak, coldly, perfectly, yet without sympathy. Wolfe felt a strange mingling of repulsion and interest. He found himself wondering whether this woman who had so fair a face and body had always carried a half-dead soul.

When he rose again, Mrs. Brandon had moved away, and her hair gleamed in the sunlight. The white figure showed up in isolation against the shorn grass. The sunlight seemed to fall away from it as though there was nothing that the golden arms could clasp.

The man came back with a hurdle covered with horse-droch, and one of them carried a wet sheet. The summer day that had stood stolidly still in the presence of the great lady, moved on again into action. Wolfe drew a deep breath of relief. Here was something to fight for, the life of a man.

Wolfe felt a strange mingling of repulsion and interest. He found himself wondering whether this woman who had so fair a face and body had always carried a half-dead soul.

When he rose again, Mrs. Brandon had moved away, and her hair gleamed in the sunlight. The white figure showed up in isolation against the shorn grass. The sunlight seemed to fall away from it as though there was nothing that the golden arms could clasp.

The man came back with a hurdle covered with horse-droch, and one of them carried a wet sheet. The summer day that had stood stolidly still in the presence of the great lady, moved on again into action. Wolfe drew a deep breath of relief. Here was something to fight for, the life of a man.

At the foot of the tree they had laid a man. His face was dead-white with a queer glistening whiteness.

She turned away to speak to the woman in the blue bodice and white apron, and Wolfe bent over the unconscious man. Yet he could not prevent himself from listening to the beautifully casual voice of the woman in white. She spoke as a statue might be expected to speak, coldly, perfectly, yet without sympathy. ### A Reason Why Baby Is So Good

Miracles do not usually happen. And so, when I read a little mother who proudly tells me that her baby is a good baby, and absolutely no trouble at all, I always know that that little mother has been giving herself entirely to the task of looking after her babe. Such mothers know that cleanliness in connection with a baby is far more than just giving it a daily bath. That, of course, is one of the essentials, but it isn't the whole program. It means washing his hands and face many times a day. It means never letting him lie in wet undergarments. It means taking scrupulous care of his clothes. Wash all the woolies in a mild soap that is just comfortably warm to the hands. Be sure that all rinsing waters are of the same temperature. On no account rub or wring a woolen garment. Just squeeze it gently and wring it up and down in the suds and in the rinsing water. Pull the garments gently into shape. With care the little woolen things will be pretty even after repeated washings.

Boil the Bottles

After a feeding with the bottle, put bottle and nipple in cold water and set them aside for better washing later. In the morning wash all bottles and nipples in hot soap suds, using a bottle brush to get into corners. Rinse them in cold water. Then place the bottles on a stove in a pan of cold water and let them boil for a full five minutes. Fish them out and drain them on a clean cloth. Cover with another cloth until they are filled again. Keep the nipples in a covered jar.

It isn't necessary to spend a lot of money on baby's nursery to have it lovely and immaculate. Make it a white temple.

A white enamel crib that can be easily washed is far more sanitary than a be-ribboned bassinet that catches dirt. Place it where the light can reach it without streaming in the child's eyes. Have enough sheets on hand so that they can be changed often. Keep the floor clean so that the creeping child is in no danger of contamination.

White washable walls, a washable rug, a few necessary pieces of furniture, some gay pictures — and there you have a nursery that answers all the requirements of comfort and cleanliness.

Determine Sanity

HAMILTON, April 24 — A hearing on the sanity of Charles Ring, 26, alleged Middletown wife-slayer, was scheduled to begin today.

His wife Bertha, was shot to death in a beauty parlor.

Envoy on Post

Josephus Daniels, former U. S. Secretary of the Navy and now United States Ambassador to Mexico, is pictured with Dr. Jose Manuel Puig Cassaurane, Mexican Secretary for Foreign Relations, during Ambassador Daniels' first official call after arrival in Mexico City. The U. S. Envoy was given a warm welcome to his new post.

Varied Menus for The Family

Of course you are serving good food, well cooked, but are you serving sufficient variety, trying new dishes, so that your family won't be able to tell the day of the week by merely looking at the evening meal? You know, Monday croquette days, made from Sunday's left-overs, Tuesday, lamb stew and so on. We don't mean to say that you should radically alter your menus, especially if you manage to include dishes that the family like. But you should try some extras, some tasty, different dishes to add a new zest and tang to the meal. Instead of being content to serve just lettuce and tomatoes as the salad course, why not celebrate spring by serving a raw salad done in a very new way, a good looking, healthy salad. Here it is:

Dissolve one package of lemon or lime flavored gelatin. Add two tablespoons of vinegar and one-half teaspoon salt. Chill. When slightly thickened fold in half cup of finely shredded cabbage, one cup of finely cut celery, one pimiento, finely cut and one tablespoon of finely chopped green pepper. Turn into individual molds. Chill till firm. Unmold on crisp lettuce and garnish with mayonnaise. This will serve six.

Using Left-Overs

Now to make Monday something else than left-over-croquette-day, why not make a shepherd's pie out of those left-overs I know your family will enjoy it, especially the men folk.

Add four tablespoons of quick cooking tapioca, one teaspoon salt, eighth of a teaspoon of paprika and a similar quantity of pepper to one and a half cups of hot water and one cup of hot gravy or meat stock. Cook in double boiler fifteen minutes or until tapioca is clear.

stirring frequently. Add one finely chopped onion, one tablespoon parsley finely chopped, one tablespoon ketchup or two teaspoons Worcestershire sauce and two cups of cooked meat, diced. Mix well. Pour into a greased baking dish, spread on top, two cups of mashed potatoes, well seasoned, and bake in a moderate oven for about 20 minutes or until potatoes are brown. This will serve six.

WIN A "BIKE"

Bicycles Given Away

... One In Each Kroger Store Operated Out of Cleveland Branch

ON APRIL 24th, the Kroger Grocery & Baking Company are giving every boy and girl an unusual opportunity to win a genuine Colson Scout Bicycle, fully equipped. Have you ever seen a Colson Scout? If you haven't, drop around to your nearest Kroger Store and look it over. It's in the window. Imagine yourself astride that saddle, gripping the long handles, your feet pushing those oversize pedals, just sailing down the avenue amidst the admiring and envious shouts of your pals. It glitters and gleams its way into your heart, and believe us it has all the "gadgets" any boy or girl ever wished a "bike" had!

It's easier than you think to win a Colson Scout Bicycle! There's going to be one for EVERY neighborhood — over 320 of them — EVERY Kroger Store is going to give one away, and isn't that making it easy? Here's how you do it:

To become eligible to win this Colson Scout you just register at your nearest Kroger Store. After you have registered, the Kroger Manager, who will guide you and advise you during the contest, will give you a four-page booklet outlining down to the merest detail what you must do to win the Colson Scout.

Remember, there's no element of chance connected with this contest. It costs you nothing to enter, and nothing to compete. It is the simplest of contests!

Every time your mother, aunts or cousins, shop at a Kroger Store, have them ask for a "I-Vote" coupon on every 25c purchase they make. Sell the neighbors on the idea, too. When they shop at Kroger's they'll be glad to help you win a "bike." Just have them ask for the coupons they're entitled to on the amount of their purchases.

Wide-awake boys and girls who do not delay their entrance into the contest will reap a real advantage by their early action. The sooner you start accumulating these votes the more time you have to accumulate the prize winning total. Inform all your friends of your determination to win one of these big prizes—ask them to buy at Kroger's, to save on their budget and save votes for you!

Go into the contest with a determination to win — don't relax for even a moment—if you do this, you're bound to be the proud possessor of a Colson "bike" when the contest ends, May 20th. Down in the corner there's a little box that tells you what the "bike's" made of and in general, given you a very fair idea that when we say that Colson Scout's a "beaut," we know our "Bicycles."

Register today and start right in collecting votes.

County Scouts Stage Annual Exposition at Columbiana

COLUMBIANA, April 24.—The Columbiana High school auditorium held one of the largest crowds Friday evening when the annual Boy Scout exposition, given by troops of Columbiana county council, was held.

400 Scouts, Spectators Present
About 400 Scouts and the same number of interested spectators, from Chester and Newell, W. Va., East Liverpool, Wellsville, Salem, Leetonia, Washingtonville, Lisbon, East Palestine and New Waterford, County Scout Executive Charles F. Felton of Lisbon presided and was assisted in the procedure by County President Lodge Riddle, Supr. Earl S. Kerr of Salem, and Judge H. W. Hammond.

Charles Boyer, Chester, W. Va., read a letter from former President Herbert Hoover in which he praised the Columbiana county council for its meritorious work in 1932 and presented the council with an award. This council was one of six honored in the three states comprising the scout district. Riddle accepted the award in the name of the council.

Lisbon Band Plays
The Lisbon school band of 55 pieces directed by Arthur W. H. furnished music. A play "The Eight Ages of Scouting" was presented by Lisbon Troops 17 and 18. The duties assigned to Troop 15 of Columbiana under Scoutmaster Jaul Johnston were building a "Lean-to" and building a pyramid. The boys also did traffic duty prior to the exposition and served as aides in the school building.

About 110 boys received tenderfoot badges with presentations made by Kerr in the regular scout investiture service. Other commendable activities demonstrated included: Dressing race, semaphore signaling, knot tying race, first aid carries, electric accident, use of various types of bandages, stretcher drill, fireman's drill, etc.

The license plates on the machine when captured had been stolen from Marshall George Hartman of New Waterford. A hearing was held Saturday evening before Mayor J. L. Hum and the men were bound over to the grand jury and taken to the county jail in Lisbon.

The quota for Fairfield township in the reforestation program has been set at 4 by H. H. Hughes of Columbus, supervisor for this district. Applications must be filed here and following the preliminary examination, eliminations will be made by local officials and the list will later be rechecked by Mr. Hughes.

Members of the South Side club met Thursday afternoon with Mrs. D. J. Miller, South Main st. The Methodist church was filled to capacity and more Friday evening to hear the Lehman evangelistic party of Wheeling, W. Va., many being present from surrounding towns. Junior Lehman, the 18-year-old evangelist, preached a temperance sermon, being brought here under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. The party, in addition to the speaker, consisted of Rev. and Mrs. L. P. Lehman and Messrs. Washington and Anderson, colored soloist and accompanist, who furnished excellent music. A large audience also attended the afternoon service.

Officer of Ill-Fated Akron Likes Performance of Macon

(By Associated Press)

AKRON, O., April 24.—The U. S. S. Macon, the navy's new giant dirigible was labeled a better handling, quicker ship than the late Akron today by the only officer to survive the disaster that wrecked her sister ship.

Leut. Commander Herbert V. Wiley, second in command when the Akron crashed to sea 20 days ago, expressed his opinion of the world's newest largest air cruiser in a few words but he added to them a smile indicating approval.

State's Film Is Daring Drama Of U. S. President's Career

THOSE who look for motion picture entertainment permeated with the tense, authentic melodrama of actual headlines of today's news will find "Gabriel Over the White House," now playing at the State theater, one of the outstanding picture events of the year.

Author Is Anonymous
Its anonymous author builds his story around a United States president who steps out and does something about current problems himself.

Headed by Walter Huston as the president who overnight is transformed from an insincere, back-slapping politician to a man of iron and a man that when he says something must be done it is done, whether the politicians like it or not, the distinguished cast also includes Karen Morley, last seen opposite Wallace Berry in "Flesh"; Franchot Tone, Broadway star who will be seen opposite Joan Crawford in "Today's Live"; Arthur Byron, last seen here in "20,000 Years in Sing Sing"; little Dickie Moore, C. Henry Gordon, David Landau and Jean Parker.

Washington As A Background
The drama, laid in the historic background of the national capital with many scenes of the executive mansion, starts with the inauguration of the simple country man, Jud Hammond, who becomes the Hon. Judson Hammond, President of the United States. His first press conference shows him to be jovial, insincere, evasive—unwilling to cope courageously with the national problems.

He is injured in an automobile accident and on his return to work, following a long illness which has given him plenty of time to think things over, he becomes a new Judson Hammond, hard and assertive, a leader—not a follower.

He fires the Secretary of War and asks for the resignation of his entire cabinet when they hesitate to support his moves to relieve the unemployment army. He fights directly with the "king" of the racketeers and through a federal police force wipes him out.

List Road Needs

COLUMBUS, April 24—O. W. Merrell, state highway director, ordered a survey of repairs needed on state highways so work may begin as soon as the legislature approves the general budget.

Selfishness Topic of Talk by Reeves

Some of the world's most successful men become failures because of selfishness, Clifton Reeves told members of the David Bevan boys class of the First Baptist church in an address Sunday morning.

Reeves discussed the subject, "Selfishness," stating that "a man may succeed for a time by a selfish attitude but in the end loses his friends, his position in life and, many times, his financial standing."

Reeves has been teacher of the class in the absence of David Bevan who is now in Great Britain. The class is open to all men between ages of 16 and 25.

Debate Is Looming On Inflation Plan

WASHINGTON, April 24—With the Roosevelt controlled inflation plan coming up for formal debate, senate Republicans moved today to bring out their heaviest offensive in an effort to arouse national sentiment against what they have called "the road to ruin."

Democratic leaders were willing to let the Republicans make the most of the debate, confident that they have the power to jam the measure through when the vote is put probably by Wednesday.

The house made ready to finish consideration and vote today on the Roosevelt Tennessee Valley-Mississippi Shoals development plan leaders said approval was certain.

Other phases of the administration's expansive domestic reconstruction program were being shaped in committee, with much attention being given to the bill for refinancing mortgages on small city homes. President Roosevelt is expected to send to Capitol Hill early this week a message outlining his plan for assisting the railroads through the appointment of a federal co-ordinator.

Scenes from Water-Logged New England

Spring came to New England on the wings of a blizzard, and now floods are adding to the discomfort. These three scenes give an idea of the extent to which the Merrimack River has run wild, inundating vast tracts of farmland and isolating villages and towns along its banks. Top photo is the scene of watery desolation at Methuen, Mass., where several feet of water cover the main street; at lower left, a family is shown leaving home in a canoe, and at right, a chivalrous boy doing a "Walter Raleigh" for "sis."
